NPS Accepting Applications For Master of Systems Analysis Degree

The Naval Postgraduate School (NPS) is accepting applications through Aug. 15 for officers wishing to enroll in the fall semester of their Master of Systems Analysis (MSA) degree.

The 24-month, part-time program uses a mix of distance learning methods designed to prepare students to apply critical thinking and analytical skills to key decisions in operational and staff assignments.

Students are responsible for only textbooks and materials. Classes for the Fall 2006-2008 degree program will begin Sept. 27.

The program is targeted toward unrestricted line officers in fleet concentration areas of Norfolk and San Diego, as well as Washington, D.C., but is open to qualified uniformed officers and federal government civilians, too. Prospective students are required to have a Baccalaureate degree and a minimum grade point average of 2.2. They must have taken calculus and received a "C" or better, and be in receipt of a favorable command endorsement.

New MSA classes will begin each spring and fall quarter in Washington, D.C. (Pentagon); Norfolk, Va.; and San Diego.
